The book cover features a highly decorative border. At the top, two winged cherubs are shown in profile, one on the left and one on the right, holding a banner. Below them is a large, stylized archway containing a fan-like pattern. The central text is framed by two vertical columns. Each column contains a figure of a woman in classical attire, possibly a personification of a virtue or a historical figure, standing on a pedestal. The bottom section of the cover is dominated by a large coat of arms, which is a quartered shield. The quarters contain a lion passant guardant, a lion passant guardant, a lion passant guardant, and a lion passant guardant. The center of the shield contains a smaller shield with a cross. The shield is flanked by two winged cherubs, one on the left and one on the right, who appear to be holding the shield. The entire design is rendered in a classic, engraved style.
